

Prospects for Housing Market

Kennedy Foster

CML Policy Consultant, Scotland

Areas to be covered

- Areas to be covered Economic Background and Prospects
- Different elements to Housing Market
- Affordability
- Arrears and Possessions
- Outlook

Economic Background

- 10 years of low inflation, low unemployment, consistent growth and low interest rates
- Record Mortgage Volumes
- Rising House Prices
- Highly competitive Mortgage Market
- High levels of personal debt, much secured against property

Present Situation

- Inflation reached 3.1% (March 2007)
- Interest Rate increased to 5.5% (May 2007)
- Affordability pressures increasing
- Bankruptcies, arrears and possessions have been increasing

Outlook

- Inflation to fall quickly to 2%
- Markets have priced a further 0.25% rate increase—too pessimistic?
- Demand for housing still exceeds supply
- Wage inflation still subdued
- Unemployment low
- NOT SIMILAR TO 1990 –would expect slow down in house price inflation

Different elements to Housing Market

- Regional
- Home owner
- Buy to let
- Sub prime

Affordability

- First Time Buyers
  - 18.3% income on Mortgage in March 2007 compared with 16% in March 2006
  - Income multiples 3.31 x income compared with 3.15 in March 2006
  - 88% of FTBs took Fixed Rate in March 2007
- Mortgage Products/Homestake
- Lending must be prudent

Arrears and Possessions

- Forecast Summary

	2003	2004	2005	2006	2007	2008
Arrears over 3 months, number at end	93,790	92,090	111,930	103,940	130,000	120,000
Possessions, in period	7,830	6,030	10,310	17,000	19,000	20,000

- 1991-75,540 Possessions—1.9 million additional mortgages today

Conclusion

- Martin Ellis, Chief Economist, HBOS

“Demand remains healthy and together with tight supply continues to push up house prices. Good economic growth and a strong labour market will support healthy housing demand.”

“However negative real earnings growth and the increases in interest rates since August 2006 are expected to increase pressure on household finances resulting in a slow down in house inflation over the coming months.”